Competition Practice

CEG is a leading global economic consultancy that provides expert economic analysis in support of competition cases

CEG is amongst the top 20 competition economics consultancies according to Global Competition Review and its experts are consistently included in the GCR's and Expert Guide's list of recommended competition economists.

CEG brings together senior economic advisers with experience in leading competition and regulatory agencies, industry and academia. We rigorously apply economic theory and advanced quantitative techniques combined with industry knowledge to offer insightful and dependable advice. Our quantitative finance practice complements our economics expertise.

CEG economists prepare expert reports, provide input into client submissions, offer strategic advice and provide expert testimony and presentations before competition agencies, courts and arbitral tribunals across the globe.

In recent years, CEG economists have worked on important competition and regulatory cases across many industries. CEG won an award for its work on the case against Rio-Tinto / BHP transaction. We have also been involved in high-profile competition damages cases.

We have substantial experience of casework before the European Commission as well as national competition agencies across Europe, North America and Asia-Pacific.

Our offices span Europe, North America and Asia-Pacific. We pride ourselves on the ability to present the right arguments and data to agencies in a way they appreciate, using our extensive knowledge of the markets and the jurisdictions in which we work.

ANTITRUST / COMPETITION

CEG economists have substantial experience of applying economics to Article 101 and 102 cases (and their national equivalents) before the European Commission, national authorities and courts.

CEG has advised on major cartel and restrictive agreement investigations brought by competition agencies.

CEG also applies economic theory and empirical techniques, to determine whether firms have substantial market power, and whether there is an abuse of market position.

MERGERS

CEG economists have provided economic analysis essential to clearing high-profile merger cases.

We advance economic theory and economic and simulation techniques to address market definition and competitive effects issues as well as the quantification of efficiencies.

Our experts have presented analysis before competition authorities, arbitration tribunals and courts.

MARKET INVESTIGATIONS

CEG has extensive experience in helping firms formulate economic arguments and evidence in market investigations, conducted by national competition authorities around the world.

We have particular experience in network industries such as banking and financial services, energy, media, transport and telecoms, where we have represented many of the largest companies in their markets.

DAMAGES

CEG has been in the forefront of economic consultancies advising on private actions against those in breach of competition law in Europe, including cases involving intellectual property, equity and commercial damages.

CEG applies economic and financial analysis to assess both the question of liability as well as estimating the quantum of damages incurred. Our analysis has been presented to competition authorities and courts, and we participate in settlement meetings.

STATE AID

CEG economists have extensive experience in applying economic and financial analysis to help public and private sector clients in Article 107 cases.

For ex ante assessment of planned aid measures, provide economic advice on its design so that it does not constitute State aid and does not require notification. In notification procedures, we conduct economic analysis for compatibility assessments.

In investigations of aid measures already in place or for ex post assessments, we prepare persuasive supporting economic analysis on compatibility.
